The Man And The Tide

It isn't the man who goes up with the tide.
As it easily floats him along,
But the man against whom it has turned, that deserves
The honor of wreath and song.
The man who still battles against the tide.

And struggles to reach the star.
Ah, he is the hero his friends will pride.
Because of his dauntless soul.

The strugger there in the angry deep.
That against him is rolling a flood.

Watch how no fruits in the storm's sweep
With the spirit of joy in its blood!

His battle is terrible all the while,
As the waters keep dashing him down:

But it's better than drifting in a song and smile.
On the tide that ripples to toil.

The many ride on the friendly wave
Of the river of life each day,
But the souls that are bright with the gift called brave.

Are the men that are tossed in the spray:
The men that must battle from hour to hour.

Against the tides that are strong,
And not the fellows with plenty of power.

They drift with the stream along.
